mans to have the capacity to love and be loved if we will only get out of our own way desperately wants us to now him/her. We call this yearning force our God. How then do we set that straight? How can this power, this force, this being become known, understood, and offer eternal possibility?

How can we become a possibility of bountiful love and justice? Of caring for the poor, marginalized, and to push up against that historic nature of humanity that so often, too often, seeks to bully, dominate, abuse, and hoard resources? There must be an answer both within us and beyond our capacities. Or our existence means too little. What can truly give us the beauty that we deserve to be? It comes from within and from outside of us. So, Advent grapples with these questions BUT it also promises that there is hope, light, a solution. There is possibility and that possibility will become manifest in our story and play out in our faith.

Have hope this Advent and consider what your possibilities are, not born out of ego, but born out of humility. How can we love better, behave better, be better and do so without guilt, self hatred, or at the expense of another. We are so lovely beautiful if we will only get out of our own way. Take a moment and reflect, perhaps with the light of a candle to soften the moment, on just how delightful you are. Advent is "The Festival of Light."
